"My Love Is Like A Red, Red Rose" (Robert Burns)

Bulgarian Rose (Rosa damascena) is one of the most valuable fragrances on the planet. A mere 15 tons are produced world-wide per year. Bulgaria, Turkey and Morocco are the largest producers. The rose flowers are picked in full bloom. This work is extremely labour intensive. A good picker can gather about 3kg of flowers in one hour. The flowers are kept chilled for distillation. A mixture of flowers and water is boiled and the steam condensed and collected. Rose oil floats on top of the water as a waxy substance which is decanted and distilled again. The process demands skilled knowledge and extreme precision. Otto and attar are the purest rose oils. About 5 tons of flowers are needed to make 1 litre of rose otto. Rosa damascena (Rose absolute), known as the Queen of oils for its intensely 'feminine' character, has many exceptional qualities. A supreme aphrodisiac, it is emotionally soothing, lifts the spirits and raises confidence. Only the smallest amount of this precious and exquisite aroma is required to add remarkable character.
